*O thus, quoth Dighton, lay the gentle babes, —
Thus, thus, quoth Forester, goodling ere another
Within their embrace, sweetest, arise.
These lips were fair, yet now on a skull;
Black in their summer beauty, like and other;
A look of progress on their fallen lay.*

SHAKSPEARE.
King Richard the Third.
ACT IV SCENE III.

*What once, quoth Forester, almost changed my mind :
— But O the devil — there the villain Dighton,
When Dighton thus told on, — we were deceived
The most supernatural sweet work of nature,
That from the prime creation, we are found —*
